

The contributors

Jakkie Cilliers is the executive director of the Institute for Security Studies, a regional research institute based in Pretoria, South Africa. He has written extensively on security issues in Africa including private security, regional security architecture and peacekeeping and is the author and co-author of several books. E-mail: jkc@iss.co.za

Duncan Clarke is chairman of Global Pacific & Partners, an independent Management Advisory Group, focused on worldwide oil and gas, and based in Johannesburg, with 20 years experience in global petroleum strategy and issues. The Group publishes research on Africa, Asia, Latin America, MidEast, competitors and National Oil Companies. E-mail: dgclarke@global.co.za

Richard Cornwell read history at university, specialising on Africa. Subsequently he worked as a military historian, but for the past twenty years he has concentrated on African current affairs, as a researcher, writer, media commentator and university lecturer. He and Jakkie Potgieter worked together to establish the Africa Security Analysis Programme at the ISS in 1997. Current research focus includes an in-depth study of the future of the state in Africa. E-mail: rjc@iss.co.za

Hannelie de Beer is a senior researcher at the African Security Analysis Programme at the Institute for Security Studies. As a member of the South African National Defence Force, she monitored and interpreted developments in various African countries, especially Angola. Since leaving the SANDF in 1997, she has participated in various conferences, briefings and seminars on Angola. E-mail: Hdb@iss.co.za

Christian Dietrich completed research for this book while working on contract for the Institute for Security Studies. Previously he wrote a thesis on Executive Outcomes in 1997 while completing a BA degree at Princeton University, and was trained in gemmology in Johannesburg. E-mail: dietrich@diamondstudies.com

Richard Dietrich lives in Washington DC and works as a consultant in international development. He has worked on projects for the US Agency for International Development, as well as the Inter-American Development Bank, and with consulting firms in Washington. He received his MBA from Yale University and attended Wesleyan University for his undergraduate studies. E-mail: dietrichhr@aol.com

Virginia Gamba is a deputy director of the Institute for Security Studies in South Africa and head of the Arms Management Programme. Past postings include project director at the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in Geneva and programme officer for arms control, disarmament and demobilisation at the John D and Catherine T MacArthur Foundation of Chicago. E-mail: virginia@iss.co.za

Philippe Le Billon is a research associate with the School of Geography (University of Oxford) and with the Overseas Development Institute (London). His research concerns the political economy of armed conflicts, with a focus on the role of natural resources and the private sector. He holds a PhD (St Antony's College, Oxford) and MBA (Paris). He worked with IDRC, French Foreign Affairs, the UN, and a number of NGOs in Cambodia, former Yugoslavia, and Angola. E-mail: LeBillon@odi.org.uk

Assis Malaquias is an assistant professor of government at St. Lawrence University in Canton, NY, USA. His areas of specialisation include International Politics, International Political Economy, African Politics, and Conflict Studies. He has written extensively about the Angolan conflict. E-mail: amalaquias@stlaw.edu

Andrea E Ostheimer joined the Institute for Security Studies as project officer based in Maputo, Mozambique. Prior to that she was the Werner-Kaltefleiter Research Fellow at the Institute of Security Studies, Christian-Albrechts-University, Kiel/Germany. She is currently completing her PhD dissertation on Sovereignty, (Neo-) Patrimonialism and the Impact of Non-State Actors in Africa. She has published a number of articles and a monograph on aspects related to Portuguese speaking Africa. E-mail: aeosth@iss.co.za

Johan Peleman is a researcher on illicit trafficking and war economies in Africa. He worked as a consultant to the United Nations Sanctions Commission for Angola (the Fowler Commission) and is co-author of 'The Arms Fixers', a book on arms brokering and shipping that was published in Oslo in 1999. He is also director of the International Peace Information Service in Antwerp, Belgium. E-mail: johan.peleman@skynet.be

Jakkie Potgieter is the head of the situation room and the Senior Field Researcher for the Africa Security Analysis Programme at the Institute for Security Studies. He is responsible for ongoing research of the conflicts in Central and Southern Africa for the past six years and has completed various publications, field reports and studies on the region. Current research focus includes an in-depth study of the military capabilities and support structures of insurgent groups on the African continent. E-mail: jp@iss.co.za

William Reno is an associate professor of political science at Northwestern University in Chicago. He is the author of 'Corruption and State Politics in Sierra Leone' (Cambridge, 1995) and 'Warlord Politics and African States' (Lynne Rienner, 1998). His current project compares commercial aspects of warfare and factional politics in Africa and Central Asia. E-mail: reno@northwestern.edu