

Notes on contributors

Dr Peter Batchelor is a Senior Researcher at the Centre for Conflict Resolution, University of Cape Town. He is Co-ordinator of the Centre's Project on Peace and Security and Project Manager of the Southern African Military Information Centre. His research interests include military expenditure, arms industry and arms trade issues in Southern Africa, and he has acted as a consultant and policy advisor to the South African Departments of Defence and Trade and Industry.

Ms Virginia Gamba is project leader of the Towards Collaborative Peace project at the Institute for Security Studies. Previously, she was head of the Project on Disarmament and Conflict Resolution at the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in Geneva, and was a professor in the Department of War Studies, King's College, London. She has also served as special advisor to the Argentine ministries of Defence and Foreign Affairs.

Ms Lucy Mathiak is Director of Communications at the Office of International Studies and Programs at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. She has published articles on light weapons and internal conflict, and the use of light weapons as a tool of US foreign policy. She is an advisor to the British American Security Information Council Project on Light Weapons and its Project on the Arms Trade.

Ms Sarah Meek is a senior researcher at the Institute for Security Studies. Her current areas of research are light weapons proliferation in Southern Africa, local and national disarmament initiatives and the role of international organisations in disarmament. Previously she has been a researcher at the Centre for Nonproliferation Studies in Monterey, California and worked for the United Nations Centre for Disarmament Affairs in New York.

Dr R T Naylor is Professor of Economics at McGill University in Montreal, Canada. Formerly a business historian, for the last twelve years his main fields of research have been black markets, smuggling and international financial crime.

Mr Jakkie Potgieter is Senior Field Researcher at the Institute for Security Studies. He was the Senior Military Expert at the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, and spent time in the South African Defence Force as an artillery officer. His current areas of research are on disarmament during peacekeeping operations, patterns of arms flows in Southern Africa and conflict and security issues in sub-Saharan Africa.

Dr Phil Williams is the Director of the University of Pittsburgh's Ridgway Center for International Security Studies and Professor of the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University. He has taught at the Universities of Aberdeen and Southampton and has published extensively in the field of international security.